Club players and youth players, in particular, who don't want to completely replace their stick, look for a familiar feel when choosing a blade. A medium stiffness often feels well-balanced in everyday play: direct enough for clean passes and shots, yet controllable when receiving the ball and in tight situations along the boards. The right-handed version is suitable for players with the appropriate blade grip and can be easily integrated into existing stick setups.

Key factors in the selection process are the blade orientation and the desired level of stiffness, ensuring the blade matches your playing style and existing shaft.
