Club players, in particular, often pay less attention to big promises when choosing a new blade and more to how it performs during ball reception, dribbling, and shooting. A medium hardness strikes a balance that effectively combines control with clean feedback. This is particularly helpful during daily training when there are many ball contacts, and the blade needs to respond reliably during passing, dribbling, and quick shots. The left-handed version is designed for left-handed players and is intended for those who consistently play on that side.

An important factor in your selection is choosing the right stick type: “left” means the blade is designed for left-handed use.
