The CCM HTC 910 in white is an ice hockey helmet for players who don't want to settle for a basic, standard model during regular practice and games. This model is the result of many years of research, development, and testing. Developed in collaboration with the Neurotrauma Impact Science Lab at the University of Ottawa, the helmet is designed for ambitious club players who prioritize protection and comfort.

It's especially on the ice that you quickly realize how important it is to have a helmet that not only protects but also stays comfortable during longer sessions. With the CCM HTC 910, the scientifically driven design addresses exactly that: the interplay between protection and comfort. This is particularly relevant for players who train several times a week and are looking for equipment that performs reliably in everyday club play without causing unnecessary distractions.

When choosing a helmet, the most important factor is finding the right size so that the helmet sits securely and snugly on your head.
