A protective shirt of this type is particularly appealing to youth players and club players who need a balance of protection and mobility. In everyday hockey, it's important that the gear doesn't sit loosely and fits snugly under the jersey. This is exactly where a shirt-style design shines, because it fits closer to the body than separate protective pieces and makes changing during practice or before a game easier.

When choosing a size, it's worth considering the desired close-fitting style and the space available under the rest of your gear.
